Retired athletic trainer Joseph Godek and Dr. Edward McFarland, MD will present:
Immediate Management of Appendicular Joint Dislocations

The on-site management of joint dislocations presents significant challenges in evaluation and immediate treatment, and has long been a controversial issue for certified athletic trainers and supervising physicians. As members of the writing group of the NATA Position Statement: Immediate Management of Appendicular Joint Dislocations the presenters will provide insight into the development of the position statement from the perspective of the athletic trainer and the physician.

Attention will be given to deciding which dislocated joints might be reduced on-site and which should be splinted and transported to a medical facility for reduction. Factors that influence the decision making process will be presented. These factors include: the possession of a written protocol by the AT supported by the supervisory physician, employer and state regulations that approve the AT's attempts to reduce the dislocated joint; the AT's qualifications and experience; the specific joint dislocated; whether the dislocation is a first time or recurrent dislocation; the patient's age and overall health; whether there are associated injuries.
